PARENTS: Focusing On Your Child's Strengths Calms Anxiety

Even the most capable children sometimes complain, "I don't get this," or "I'll never get this! I'm dumb!"

If you let this go on, your child will think he can't do well, so he won't even try. Here is how to get your child back on track:

- ◆ Avoid comparing him to siblings.
- ◆ Focus on his strengths. Don't emphasize failures.
- ◆ Talk about how he has improved— not about what he has done wrong or forgotten.
- ◆ Challenge negative talk. Remind him of past successes.
- ◆ Put setbacks into perspective. "Yes, you made a bad grade, but you gave it a good try. Let's talk to the teacher about how you can improve."
- ◆ Be a booster. Never say, "Stop complaining and get to work." Admit the work might be hard, but remind him that he has made it through hard work before.
- ◆ Show your interest in what he is learning. Ask to see his work.
- ◆ Listen attentively to what he says about schoolwork— without judging or arguing. If you have a concern, be sure to share it with his teacher.
